

Winthrop Sociologists with an Anthropology Concentration are...

- Global Citizens
 - Commonly, our Anthropology concentrates study or do research abroad which broadens their worldview immensely. Through cross-cultural exploration, they learn to appreciate the value of diverse cultural traditions and perspectives.
- Researchers
 - Whether taking part in an archaeological excavation, analyzing bones or artifacts in the lab, or conducting ethnographic research in the field, our Anthropology concentrates gain marketable research skills that are valuable for obtaining jobs in urban planning, development, conservation related fields, and museums. They also learn how to develop their own research projects from start to finish giving them the tools they need to answer important questions.
- Deep-thinkers
 - Our Anthropology concentrates learn about global social inequality, social change, along with our shared humanity that unites us across time and place. They frequently double major with history and thus, they possess a deep historical, global, and social lens through which to view the world.

What are Sociologists with an Anthropology Concentration doing?

2018 Grad- Christine Buckley- Christine Buckley graduated with honors and international experience. She obtained a B.A. in Art History and Sociology with a concentration in Anthropology and a minor in International and Global Studies. She now works as at the Bechtler Museum of Modern Art and freelances for a media design company.

2018- Greg Lamb- Recently completed work on a field archaeology team in Mongolia with plans for future graduate work in archaeology.

2014- Allison Morris- Recently completed excavations of ancient ruins in Spain. Currently working as a legal assistant, Allison has plans in 2020 to return to her love for Anthropology and pursue graduate work in archaeology.

